Blood Transfusions Start Saving of U.S. Farm Life

Blood transfusions, now saving countless human lives, also are being used today to save lives of thousands of farm animals and pets, the American Veterinary Medical Association reports.

Animal ailments being treated successfully with blood transfusions include shipping fever, infectious calf scours, jaundice in foals, sweet clover poisoning, anaplasmosis, leptospirosis, and distemper. Veterinarians also give transfusions of whole blood to pets and livestock suffering severe hemorrhage as the result of injuries or surgery.

The blood donor must be a healthy animal, free of contagious or infectious disease. It should be full-grown and not too old. In large animals, those which are three to six years of age make the best donors. Among small animals, donors from one and one-half to five years of age are preferred.

The veterinary medical association explained that as a rule, a blood donor which has recovered from the illness for which the patient is being treated, is the best choice. In dairy cattle, a two or three year old animal which has gone through a seige of shipping fever and pneumonia is preferred.

Skin Disease

Many cases of inflammation of the skin (dermatitis) affecting the feet and other parts of the body can be blamed on synthetic resins used in the partial linings of shoes and other manufactured items, according to a Buffalo dermatologist.

Dr. James W. Jordan points out the many instances of dermatitis on the feet and body traced to synthetic resins and their components "make it evident" that these substances are important skin sensitizing agents. Dr. Jordan is associated with the Department of Dermatology and Syphilology, University of Buffalo School of Medicine. Contact with these substances is almost universal," said Dr. Jordan, pointing out that they are widely used in wood finishes, furniture upholstering material, varnishes and lacquers, steering wheels, handles, musical instruments, toys, games, sporting goods, wearing apparel, accessories and jewelry. Cases of dermatitis due to direct contact with hair lacquer pads, spectacle frames, garters and wrist watch bands containing these substances are known, said Dr. Jordon, adding: "It is evident that many obscure cases of dermatitis, in which no clearcut history of contact (with resins) is elicited, may be due to these compounds."

French Guiana

French Guiana's interior, draped in jungle vapor and unexplored mountains between Brazil to the south and Surinam to the west, is still one of the wildest spots left on earth. Descendants of escaped African slaves carry on ancestral rites of fetishism and, some explorers believe, human sacrifice. Head hunters roam the rain forests. But there is also gold in the heart of French Guiana, as Sir Walter Raleigh suspected in his search for Eldorado. Small placer operations, many worked by penitentiary convicts, exploit jungle streams today. Vast stands of rare hardwoods, fertile soil and untouched mineral deposits contribute to the colony's untapped wealth.

FATHER DARKLEAF

By The Editor

Some folks get up early and some folks don't. I have noticed how some folks just cannot stay in bed after the first crack of dawn. Usually get up and start moseying around. And so I suppose is usually the time one is well enough to afford to sleep late, the sheer force of habit he is the early bird.

If you will take one of the Roosevelt—purely you can spare a dime just to look at—and if you have a very closely, perhaps with a magnifying glass, you will see the initials J S just below the profile of the head of the late F. Some wise guy tried to make it appear significance of that and that J S stands for Joe Stalin. But, really the initials stand for James Sperry, automobile engraver who made the drawings for the coin. It is common practice for artists to sign their subject.

Back in the old days, the infrequent visits of a salesman to a country store was an event. No less, indeed about for weeks. We didn't have many catalogs then and only chance we had to see what was up. Most often he arrived at dinner time and then hired a buggy to drive him over for several days until his territory was covered. Usually on Sunday he presents for the family unfolded his wares to the admiration of one and all. Things ordered arrived many days later and so, perhaps today things changed. But American nature still depends to a large degree upon the skill of the salesman. It has been estimated that a good salesman keeps 33 percent of the retail merchandise commodities and provides a living for over 100 people. That is why he is good. I have no fear as a salesman. I am one of those fortunate enough to have friends who bring me their trade. But I try to give them a square deal in price, and maybe a few cents, too. But, anyway, a welcome to the American salesman and he be given to our free enterprise system.

Virginia Got Almost Million In Truck Fines

Almost one million dollars were assessed truck operators for violating the Virginia highway load limits during the fiscal year of 1950-51, the State Highway Department reported today.

The fines totaled $961,442... this was almost five times the amount obtained for overloading violations during the previous fiscal year of 1949-50.

The year marked the first time that Virginia employed general use of pit scales, which were operated jointly by weighing parties of the State Highway Department and the Virginia State Police.

There were 142,516 vehicles weighed. This was almost 350 per cent more than were weighed in 1949-50 before the installation of pit scales permitted a swifter method to check on load limit violations. Previously most of the weighing had been done by portable units. A large number of portable units still are in operation and many are used by roving parties on the back roads.

The monies derived from the overloading violations go to the Commonwealth of Virginia Literary Fund. The State realized only a $2 fee for weighing the violating trucks.

The State Police, working with the Highway Department weighing parties, issued summonses to 12,075 truck operators, and obtained convictions on 11,652. The fines totaled $910,481, and the costs of court amounted to $72,844.

The State Police, working alone, issued summonses to 399, and obtained convictions on 294, with fines totaling $50,961. The costs of court amounted to $1,644.

The majority of the violators were the three-axle semi-trailer trucks with gross weights of between 42,000 and 45,000 pounds, the Virginia Department of Highways reported.

On Virginia's heavy-duty highways, the gross load limit is 40,000 pounds for three-axle vehicles and 50,000 pounds for vehicles with four or more axles. On the routes designed for lighter duty, the limit is 35,000 pounds.

A new penalty for overloading highway violations became effective July 1, 1950. The violator now is charged two cents per pound for every pound in excess up to 5,000 pounds. Upon exceeding 5,000 or more pounds, the penalty becomes five cents per pound for every pound over the legal limit.

Milk Shortages Held Possible

Increased demand for fluid milk may cause fall and winter milk shortages in some heavy consumption areas, says B. F. Morgan, dairy Marketing specialist at V. P. I.

He points out that May is one of the flush production months, and the overall surplus was only 19.5 per cent of total deliveries including government contract sales. May was the 3rd month this year that all markets had enough deliveries from base holding producers to fully supply the Class I demand.

Morgan also forecasts higher prices for fluid milk at retail later this year.

Averages prices paid by plants for manufacturing milk in the January-June period this year were 20 per cent above 1950. Distributor average buying prices for fluid milk were up 7 per cent.

Market prices of dairy products held steady during the past three months, except for small changes in the price of butter. This stability indicates a strong market, Morgan says, since production has been increasing steadily from January through June.

Another bright spot for the dairyman—the milk-feed ratio went up in June. Based on Virginia prices, 100 pounds of milk would buy 126 pounds of feed, 6 more than in May, and 11 pounds more than June a year ago.

Market prices of feed grains and many by-product feeds declined in June. The most noticeable decline was in barley and oats, with corn showing some weakness.

Support Rate On Tobacco

Growers will get price support on their 1951 flue-cured tobacco at an average rate of 50.7 cents per pound, the Production and Marketing Administration has announced.

The rate is based on 90 per cent of parity on July 1, 1951, C. D. Jordan, State PMA Chairman, said, and compares to an average rate of 45 cents per pound last year.

Jordan said that U. S. Department of Agriculture loans will be based on official standard grades at specified rates, ranging from 17 cents a pound for non-descript to 74 cents a pound for top grade. He explained that these rates were established by USDA's Commodity Credit Corporation after consultation with growers, members of the trade, and FMA officials in Richmond in late June. That schedule of loan rates by grade is available in the local FMA office.

Tobacco loans are available to producers who do not harvest in excess of their 1951 farm acreage allotment and who otherwise comply with PMA marketing quota regulations established for flue-cured tobacco, Jordan explained. As in the past, eligible tobacco on which the auction bid price does not exceed the loan rate may be consigned for loan.

Virginia's 1951 flue-cured tobacco allotment is 112,125 acres compared to 97,325 acres last year, the state PMA chairman said. Appomattox County has an allotment of 227 acres for the 1951 crop, against 192 last year, according to County PMA chairman E. R. Gowin.

Time Now To Plan For Fall Gardens

Stretch your gardening season this year.

That's the advice from L. C. Benner, associate horticulturist at V. P. I., who says that now is a good time to plant a fall garden.

Tomatoes, he says, should be put out immediately. He urges the planting of disease-resistant varieties such as Rutgers, Pritchard, Marglobe, and Valiant.

In the leafy vegetable line, Benner suggests: mustard, head and leaf lettuce, kale and spinach. Beets, radishes, bush beans, and broccoli are other suggestions for your fall garden.

Abbitt Says Japs Want Virginia Tabacco

Congressman Watkins M. Abbitt of the Fourth District of Virginia, a member of the House Committee on Agriculture, was visited recently by a member of the House of Representatives of Japan, K. Moriyama, who was accompanied by W. Owada, Secretary of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs of the Japanese Government. Moriyama was interested in securing more Virginia tobacco for the Japanese Government.

Abbitt disclosed that prior to World War II Japen imported from $50 to $60 million of American tobacco, mostly Virginia tobacco. Since the war Japan has been importing approximately $1 million worth of American tobacco.

Abbitt and Moriyama talked of ways and means of providing dollars or exchanges for the Japanese Government so they may be in a position to gradually build up their import of American tobacco, as the Japanese people much prefer cigarettes blended with American tobacco. Japan at present is manufacturing the vast majority of cigarettes used by the people out of Japanese grown tobacco which amounts to about 80 billion cigarettes a year.

Abbitt stated that, if the proper solution could be found so as to allow the Japanese to import the quantity of American tobacco that they desire, not only would it be a help to the Japanese economy but it would be of tremendous help to the American tobacco growers, particularly in Virginia.

It is expected that an informal committee will be formed for the purpose of working out a solution to the problem.

Annual Report of Forest Service

More than two hundred and twenty-five million board feet of timber was harvested under good forestry method during the past year, according to a statement released today by State Forester, George W. Dean. This volume represents about 20 per cent of the total lumber cut in Virginia during the same period. The State Forester said that this represents real progress in growing and harvesting timber as a crop. There is hardly any other line in the nation where the forest owners as a whole, are using better forestry methods.

This accomplishment, according to Mr. Dean, proves that Virginians are ready and willing to grow and harvest timber as a crop when shown how. And better yet, they are willing to pay a reasonable price for timber service rendered by the state, rather than expect a state or federal handout.

The official report of the State Forest Service for the year ending June 30 reveals that the state foresters, working under the Timber Service and Landowner's Act, authorized by the 1948 General Assembly received 1976 requests for timberland examinations. The foresters examined and made recommendations on 200,000 acres. At the owner's request, and for which the owners paid at the rate of forty cents per thousand board feet marked, the foresters designated for harvesting 202 million board feet of lumber, marked for selective cutting 69,000 cords of pulpwood and designated 130,000 pine seed trees to be left standing.

In addition to the timber cut under recommendations by the state, several forest industries cut another twenty-five million board feet and thousands of cords of pulpwood under the direction of company foresters.

Under state recommendations only the mature and defective lumber trees, or overcrowded trees in case of pulpwood are harvested, which leaves standing the young thrifty fast growing trees. Provision is also made to leave seed trees as a source of seed for the next crop.

Most timbermen are in accord with the plan of growing and harvesting timber as a crop since they must have a continuous supply of mature trees to remain in business. They are learning that cutting mature trees means a higher percentage of the better board grades, and less cost for handling smaller logs.

A recent study by the Tennessee Valley Autority of 58 average sawmills shows that from 6 inch diameter logs only 330 board feet can be sawed per hour as compared with 18 inch logs from which 1270 board feet can be sawed per hour.

State Forester Dean observed that Keeping Virginia Green will grow a larger timber crop which means more forest dollars flowing through the business of the state.

New Date For Field Day At Charlotte Station

Date for the annual field day at the Charlotte field unit of Virginia Agricultural Experiment Sation has been changed to Wednesday, August 8.

P. H. DeHart, agronomist at V. P. I., said the change was made because the original date, August 7, conflicts with election day.

Peach Crop To Market

High Quality Peach Crop Moves to Market

Harvesting of Virginia's quality peach crop is well under way, with early varieties from the Northern Neck and Southeastern areas moving to market in good volume.

A. H. Teske, horticulturist at V. P. I., reports that most of the Early-Red-Fre crop has been marketed, and that Red Havens, one of the best varieties for freezing, are now being picked.

Golden Jubilee, a yellow-fleshed freestone variety, good for fresh eating, canning, and freezing, will be ready soon.

After Golden Jubilee will come Hale Haven and other varieties of that season.

Following Hale Haven by about a week or ten days, will come Elberta—around the first of August.

Teske says the Virginia peaches are sizing up well, and show every indication of being high quality this year. With an extremely short crop in all of the large mid-Western peach-producing states, crop summer demand for Virginia peaches is expected.

The national crop of freestone peaches is expected to be about the same as in 1950—considerably short of recent previous years. Because of the government's set aside order for canned peaches, there will be a sharp increase in home canning and freezing this season, Teske believes.

Candidates Look to Aug. 7 Primary Date

The pace has stepped up in activity among candidates for office as the August 7 primary election date approaches. Appomattox voters will decide on contests in two districts for supervisor, and a contest for county sheriff. In Southside District, F. L. Murphy, incumbent, is being opposed by C. C. Harvey. In Clover Hill District, F. A. O'Brien, incumbent, is opposed by Harry A. Williams, of Pamplin. For sheriff, David T. Robertson, incumbent, is opposed by Vernell Mitchell.

There are approximately 2,200 voters on the county eligible list this year.
